INTRODUCTION

The history of the Cold War in Denmark, Norway and Sweden is a complex research area. First of all, the Cold War transcended over five decades. Secondly the three countries in spite of their common languages and political systems were very different. Thirdly the Cold War has influenced a variety of spheres of life. Thereby the history of the Cold War covers large parts of the Nordic history after the end of the Second World War. Nordic politicians had to react to the division of Europe and the world; hence it states the frame for foreign and security politics. It was not only a question of how to react to the NATO and the Warsaw Pact or in dealings with, for instance, the East Bloc countries. The division also influenced how the Scandinavian countries interacted within the Nordic frame work and with the outside world, for instance within the organisations of European cooperation. Furthermore, it was a factor to take into account in the UN, or when the Scandinavian countries expanded their aid to the Third World. The threat from the Soviet Union and its allies was the predominant question that the militaries in the different countries had to deal with. But the Cold War was also a political conflict within the societies. It divided political parties and groupings. Most notably it split the political left and the labour movement. The divisions were fierce and led to widespread surveillance. Both public and private intelligence and security organisations from the countries and from Eastern and Western powers engaged in these activities. The ideological divisions influenced culture and, in many ways, public debate and lives. In the work break, in class or around the dinner table subjects adherent from the Cold War were discussed. Economy was influenced, strategic industries were maintained and infrastructures build also to accommodate the special situation. Mass media influenced and were influenced. Far away countries like Vietnam or South Africa came close to the people in the high north, and persons like Mao and Che Guevara were first revolutionaries and later commercial icons.

The most striking difference between the three countries is their political orientation. Whereas Norway and Denmark joined NATO in 1949, Sweden chose to stay outside the Western Alliance. Sweden did not follow a strict neutral line. The Swedish elite within military, intelligence and diplomacy kept close contact with the western side and voluntarily adopted a western policy in important matters like the German question. Still the idea of nonalignment played an important role not only for Sweden's role in the World but also for the Swedish public. Even though both Norway and Denmark were founding members of NATO, the course of the countries were quite different, not least because of the geo strategic situation of the countries. Denmark was a densely populated country; the military focused on the Baltic and depended on the development in Central Europe. Norway differed in many aspects. With its long coastline to the Atlantic and borders to the Soviet Union, the country played another role within the Western bloc.

The differences between the countries have played a big role in the Cold War research since it has in large parts been preoccupied with national security and foreign politics. In all three countries the need to understand the background and reasons for the foreign political choices has been immanent. This has left little room for comparative studies and has directed large parts of the attention of the Cold War research to this area.<sup>1</sup> In all of the countries major research projects have been completed, given some answers and often raised further debate.

In Norway the research in this area has the longest tradition. Already during the Cold War, Norwegian historians presented analysis based on archival material. Therefore Norway was the first to have a comprehensive work on the countries' foreign politics during the Cold War. This happened when Jakob Sverdrup, Knut Einar Eriksen, Helge Pharo and Rolf Tamnes published volumes 4, 5, and 6 of the "Norsk utenrikspolitikk historie" (History of Norwegian Foreign Relations) in 1996 and 1997.<sup>2</sup> As a comparison equivalent works on Danish foreign politics were published in 2004-2005.<sup>3</sup> Both the Norwegian and the Danish Cold War research has focused on the question of continuities and discontinuities and the determining factor in the countries' foreign and security politics. Although from another perspective this also goes for Sweden, where the question of how neutral the country really was, has been predominantly both within research and in the public debate.<sup>4</sup> Sweden's cooperation with the West until the end of the 1960s was examined by a Royal Commission. The commission's main task had been to survey the preparations Sweden had made to receive assistance from the West in case of a war. The Royal Commission published the results of its research on the Study of Neutrality Policy – so the official name of the commission (Neutralitetspolitikkommisjonen) – in 1994. The report had the title "If the war had come" (Om kriget kommer...) and was published at the government agency for analysis (Statens offentlige utredninger SOU 1994:11).<sup>5</sup> The Swedish neutrality policy in the period 1969-1989 was then examined by a single researcher – the ambassador Rolf Ekéus. He reviewed the security policy of Sweden during this period and published his results in an official report titled "Peace and Security. Swedish Security Policy" ("Fred och säkerhet, svensk säkerhetspolitik 1969-89") (SOU 2002:108).<sup>6</sup>

A Swedish interdisciplinary research program with the title "Sweden during the Cold War" (Sverige under kalla kriget (SUKK)) focusses mainly on the question of how neutral the neutrality policy of Sweden actually was and what the driving forces behind the development of the active Swedish foreign politics had been. Head of the research program is Professor Ulf Bjereld from the Department of Political Science at the University of Göteborg. So far almost 20 different books on a variety of topics have been published by political scientists and historians in Sweden.<sup>7</sup>

Due to the central position of foreign and security politics the focal point of the Scandinavian Cold War research has been the national state. As a panel of the senior researchers pointed out at the 24th Nordic Conference of Historians in Aarhus, Denmark, even Nordic comparisons have been quite rare. However, the national perspective has left some room for regional approaches to the Cold War. This goes especially for the High North perspective in the Norwegian research and the Baltic perspective in Denmark and Sweden. The special interest of Norwegian researchers is a consequence of the country's special situation with its possession of Svalbard, its borders to the Soviet Union, and the closeness of the Kola Peninsula, the Murmansk navy base and the North Atlantic line of defence of NATO.<sup>8</sup> Currently several institutions – for instance the University of Tromsø, Norge Luftfartsmuseum and the journal Acta Borealia - deal with these special problems of the high north. The research is both seen in a Cold War perspective, and a longer perspective of the Russo-Nordic relation around the polar circle.

For Denmark and Sweden the Baltic perspective plays a special role. The communist bloc started just a ferry ride – or a few minutes fighter flight – away. The communist states declared the Baltic "the sea of peace", but realities lay far from this scenario. The frontline went right down through these highly militarized waters. The Baltic approach to the Cold War era has been backed by a recent focus on cooperation across the sea. Closer ties to Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia have been followed up by attempts to understand the region better. This is the case with the large project on the Baltic Sea of Södertorns University College or with the renewal of the traditional international Baltic Seminar of the University of Gotland, where the first of the seminars were on the Baltic area in the beginning of the Cold War.<sup>9</sup>

Since 1990 the Cold War studies in Scandinavia have often been fuelled by government initiatives. In Norway less so than in the two other countries, this to some degree goes to show a more matured Norwegian Cold War research. Norway was the first of the three to commence in public investigations of the Cold War period, when the government in 1993/1994 set up bi-projects on the Norwegian security police (POT), the "Lund-commission" and the scientific project "The secret war" (Den hemmelige krigen). The Lund commission – named after the chairman high court judge Ketil Lund – was a classic government report which was to look into the surveillance and determine, whether injustice had been done to citizens who had been under the watchful eye of the secret police. "The secret war" was a much wider and more scientific project carried out by the senior researchers Trond Bergh and Knut Einar Eriksen. The two scholars had been granted privileged access to the Norwegian security archives, resulting in two comprehensive works (each some 600 pages) which analyzed counterintelligence and surveillance in Norway throughout the 20th century.<sup>10</sup> The publications of Bergh and Eriksen together with the research of Olav Riste are of special importance, since they are the first major scientific works within intelligence history in a Nordic context.<sup>11</sup> The activities of intelligence and security services has traditionally been an area of which Scandinavian historians had little knowledge, and been neglected compared to foreign politics. It is beyond doubt that the history of intelligence and security services are of special importance, if one wants to understand the mechanisms of the Cold War and modern politics. The ending of the Cold War made it possible to open the service archives in both East and West, and thereby enabling scholars to make the first systematic and empirical work on a sensitive area. As a remarkable innovation intelligence history was on the program on the 25th Nordic Conference of Historians in Reykjavik in 2007.

A few years after the surveillance debate in Norway, both Sweden and Denmark started their own government reports on surveillance and the dealings of the security intelligence services during the Cold War. In Sweden the government took the initiative to form a commission on surveillance with the official denotation "Rikets säkerhet och den personliga integriteten. De svenska säkerhetstjänsternas författningsskyddade verksamhet sedan år 1945" (The security of the state and the personal integrity. The activities of the Swedish Security Services to protect the Constitution since 1945), the so called SÄPO-Commission, in 1999. The task of the commission – under the chairmanship of the Lord High Steward (riksmarskalken) Gunnar Brodin – had been to collect all information and to explain the activities of the Security Services to protect the constitution in detail in the period of time between 1945 and the day the report was published. Unlike other researchers, the members of the commission had open access to the archives of the Swedish Security Services. The authority of the commission even contained the right to conduct interrogations of persons that have been active in these services or as politicians had the responsibility for these activities – almost 400 persons had been questioned by the commission. In 2002 the government agency for analysis (Statens offentliga utredningar) finally published the results of the commission (SOU 2002:87).<sup>12</sup> The publication of the report was followed by lively public debate about the operations of the security services. Inter alia the amount of registrations of persons in the register of the security services – sometimes with loose reasons – was subject of the discussion. The registrations reached their peak at the end of the 1960s with more than 100.000 registered persons. Also the historical researchers took part in the debate about the activities of the Security Services in Sweden.<sup>13</sup> Aside from the particular estimations of the results of the commission these important sources constitutes a basis for further research on Contemporary History in Sweden.

Denmark was the last country to initiate a state commission on surveillance in 1999. Since then the commission (the PET Commission) has worked in utmost secrecy. This is very characteristic for how the Danish government has engaged in the Cold War research. The PET Commission and its distance to the scientific, and general public raises the suspicion that it has been erected only to silence a public debate for a long time and to crush a future debate with a long report. This certainly has been the case with earlier reports. In the mid 1990s a fierce public debate on American nuclear weapons stationed in Greenland during the Cold War sweep through the public. The answer of the government was a (1.5 kg heavy) report, which gave the government some years of quietness and thus ended the debate.<sup>14</sup> The same technique was also applied when the PET Commission was set up in 1999, and again a year later when the government created a commission to work on the threat against Denmark during the Cold War. This report again succeeded in hampering the public debate, but failed in putting an end to it, even though its 5 kg might scare off the ordinary reader. A remarkable side effect of the Danish reports has been a step by step opening of the Danish archives, which in the beginning of the 1990s were very restrictive. The most radical step towards a liberal access to the archives was the promise made by Danish Prime Minister Anders Fogh Rasmussen, who on the 21st of January 2003 said that historians in general should be granted the same access to public archives as the privileged researchers within the closed commissions.<sup>15</sup> The long term significance of this promise is yet to be proven, since the secrecy of the PET Commission limits the knowledge of how their researchers are able to use the archives of the secret services.

The history of the labour movement and other social movements are closely attached to the Cold War. The Scandinavian researchers have been very lucky to have the well-functioning archives of the labour movement ABA (Denmark), Arbark (Norway) and ARAB (Sweden). These archives have made the documents of the left wing parties, the unions and other organisations, which have deposited their archives here easy accessible. The importance of these institutions can not be exaggerated. The research in the social democratic and communist labour movement has a strong tradition in the Nordic Countries, and has its own journals like "Arbejderhistorie" in Denmark and "Arbeiderhistorisk årbog" in Norway. With the social democrats and communists being the main adversaries in the Cold War, the history of the labour movement and the history of the Cold War is often synonymous in the Scandinavian countries. The importance of the labour movement archives and the labour movement history is further enhanced in a Cold War frame work because of the social democrats' role as "ruling parties" in all three countries. The three Scandinavian brother parties have been dominant in their respective nations. As a consequence their party archives have significance beyond that of "normal" parties. Social democratic politics were either state politics or had a fair chance of becoming it within a short time span. The social democratic and the state apparatus intervened, as did party and national interests. When social democratic organisations like the Danish AIC – the social democratic information and intelligence organisation – engaged in the anti-communist activities, it can be hard to determine, whether they were serving the party or national interests.

The public debate, and to some extent also historical works, has raised the question of guilt and morality. Who went wrong during the Cold War? Who supported the Eastern regimes? The moral dilemmas frequently surface. Discussions like this have been had especially in Denmark, where Parliament time and again has argued about the Cold War and its political implications. The latest example of these disputes is the nationalist rightist Danish Peoples Party's sponsoring of a locally renown professor Bent Jensen's Cold War project in 2007. This, in turn, has been labelled "a cover for biased vendetta driven research" by Michael Clemmesen from the Center for Military History at the military academy.<sup>16</sup> The first result of the project seemed to confirm Clemmesen's suspicions. In a national newspaper in January 2007 Jensen accused a journalist for being a KGB spy. He was drawing on material from the Danish Police Intelligence (PET), and in the process handing out still classified information to non authorized journalists.

The above mentioned case in many ways showed the weaknesses and dilemmas with the guilt approach to Cold War history. The focus on individuals draws focuses away from the matter – in this case the espionage. Furthermore former political players seem to be willing to go an extra length to expose their earlier opponents. This puts the use of sensitive and person-related archives like the ones of the intelligence services at risk. These archives are in most cases just opening and the documents must be handled with care and responsibility.

Moral questions can, of course, not be ignored when writing contemporary history. The Cold War was full of choices and dilemmas: Which side should one bet on? How should one deal with dictatorships in the second or third world? Which methods were justifiable for ones own aims? Did politicians tell the public the truth? And what if they did not? The difficult and personal choices that both laymen and political elites were faced with, makes the Cold War era especially interesting and relevant for the public at large also today.

A special aspect of the moral judgement of the Cold War era was the question of who told the truth. This was, for instance, the case in Sweden in 2003, where a public debate broke out about the links between high ranking members of the Swedish communist party (Venstrepartiet Kommunistarne, VPK) in the 1970s and 1980s. The problem with these party contacts was that the VPK allegedly cut their close ties to the communist parties in Eastern Europe after the Soviet invasion in Prag 1968. Swedish television SVT 2004 raised a debate on the (dis)honesty of the party.<sup>17</sup> Another example of such a debate is the discussions in Denmark about how the government on one hand claimed Denmark to be free of nuclear weapons in peace time, and on the other hand accepted US nuclear weapons on Greenland. In 1995 the debate led to the above mentioned government research report "Greenland during the Cold War".

One of the reasons that guilt still plays an important role in the debate about the Cold War is that many political actors from that time were still active after 1990. This, in some ways, turns Cold War and contemporary history into a mine field. On the other hand, it gives the historians some obvious advantages in respect to oral history. As the Cold War is definitively over, more and more former politicians, activists, officers and intelligence agents feel the need to tell their story. So far these opportunities have only been used limitedly. In the Danish DIIS-report 35 persons, foremost opposition politicians and diplomats were interviewed, although not systematically. The interviews are now accessible in the Danish National Archive. Also the scholars of the Swedish military academy have worked with interview. This was done at witness seminars, some of which have been published.<sup>18</sup>

This vademecum makes a first attempt to register a variety of institutions and organisations of importance for scholars working with the history of the area. It sums up to 47 larger archives, 18 smaller collections, 26 libraries, 38 research institution, 33 museums und 24 journals. This, of course, does not cover all institutions. Some may not have been contacted during the making of this vademecum, others have chosen not to participate.

It has been the ambition of the vademecum to widen the perspective of the Cold War to more than just traditional foreign relations. It has also been argued to include a variety of other aspects of the period. Furthermore it has been the aim to include as many smaller archives and collections of relevance to the scholars of contemporary history as possible. That is why the vademecum has tried to cover the major national archives as well as the small collection of societies. It has not been possible to include all relevant archives. This especially goes for the smaller ones. Social movements like regional peace movements have not in all cases left organized archives, and in the cases where they have they are often hard to localize. It is therefore the hope of the editors, that archives which have not been registered in the vademecum, will contact us, so at a later point it will be possible to make an up-dated and extended version.

Holdings: DDA is dedicated to the acquisition, preservation and dissemination of quantitative data created by researchers from the social science and the health science communities. DDA furthermore has quantitative historical data materials, especially transcribed historical censuses. DDA has a large holding of social science survey data collected after 1945. The majority of which covers subjects like political behaviour, attitudes and opinions, participation in NGO-activities e.g. unions, political parties etc. and finally youth crime and discrimination of ethnic minorities.

Access: Data can only be used for non-commercial purposes. Access limitations apply to all datasets; varies from free access to no access at all. The vast majority of datasets are easily accessible for students and researchers.

Research aids: Personal aid available by contacting DDA: mailbox@dda.dk

	Friday	10:00-15:00

Holdings: Manuscripts, pictures and sound about folklore and the history of every day life c. 1600-2000.

Special collections: Film collection: The collection contains around 40 16mm films and some 8mm films (most of them are tapes which are not edited). They show samples of life and traditions. The films' playing time are 5 to 45 minutes, and are with one exception recorded after 1960.

Video collection: The collecting started in 1979 and the collection now has more than 750 tapes. Most of the videos are about traditional dancing.

Micro film collection: It contains 380 films. Most of them are copies of the DFS' own documents. There are around 100 films, which are copies of things from outside of DFS, such as hand written ballads and notebooks. Furthermore, it contains some other writings concerning faith, custom and tales.

Access: As a principal rule, the archive is open for the public and the records are available in the reading rooms or the special room, where it is possible to see or listen to some of the records. When it comes to a little part of the records from the handwriting and sound archive, there is a clause for a decided period. In these cases the limited access is due to a wish from the giver or because the records contain private information. For some of the records if the purpose is research, it is possible to apply for an exemption by sending a written request to DFS.

Holdings: The Danish National Business Archives consist of more than 45 km of shelving which hold the history of the Danish trade and industry throughout 200 years. Most of the records are from the period 1850-1950. The archive contains around 7,000 archives of differently firms. The majority is from firms of retailers, industry and craftsmen, but the archive also includes records from the sector of transport and from firms of finance, credit and insurance. Furthermore, the archive has collections from 800 trade organisations and professional organisations. A vital part of these are collections from the main organisation of the professions and the major consolidation of employers. Finally it also contains a few hundred private archives – especially from business people and institutions with connection to the business community.

Access: Anyone has access to the archive. Records containing sensitive information are usually open after 60 years, but it is possible for researchers to obtain a dispensation. This is done by contacting the archive.

Research aids: Computers with Internet facilities. An electronic data base, Daisy, that contains information about the records such as who created the documents and where do the documents exist. It is possible to use and print micro films and roll films. Collection of handbooks. It is possible to copy records.

Publications: Since 1949 The Danish National Business Archives has published „Erhvervshistorisk årbog“ (The Danish Business History Year Book) and books on social and economic history.

Holdings: The archive contains the analysis and operative material of the DDIS, Denmark's military and foreign intelligence service. Material from the period 1950 to 1967 is accessible in the Danish National Archive. Selected documents from the Cold War can be downloaded from the service home page.

Access: Access to the service archives is quite new. The archive contains both classified and unclassified information. To gain access to classified material security clearance is needed. Applications for access are dealt with individually. In 2003 Prime minister Fogh Rasmussen promised scholars the same access to state archives as public historical commissions. Operative documents and documents relating to SIGINT are in general not accessible.

Holdings: The Military Archives of Sweden (KrA) have been a part of the National Archives of Sweden since 1995. It was founded in 1805 and belonged in one way or other to the Ministry of Defence until 1995.

The oldest documents are from the 1530s.

We have the records from the agencies belonging to the Swedish Ministry of Defence and also from individuals and associations connected to the Swedish military. We keep about 72,000 metres of shelves.

In the following are some words about our holdings concerning the Cold War period. There are the archives from the Headquarter's – 1980, from many regional and other staff up to nowadays. The same can be said concerning many other military units belonging to the Army, Navy and Air forces. We also have the most valuable archives from some of the top Swedish officers.

Special collections: Photograph collection: KrA has about 500-600 000 units; new and old.

Map collection: KrA has a wonderful collections of maps, also from abroad, but they are of no interest in this connection, since they are much older.

Access: Most of the documents also the quite young ones, are available at once. This is also true for foreigners; not just Swedes. Part of the documents are, however, classified "secret". The Swedish Act of Secrecy says that the secrecy for documents of importance for the country's security is 40 years at most. This means that a secret document from for example 1995 can be "declassified" by KrA if it does not contain any secret information. There are, of course, some exceptions to this rule. Matters of intelligence may be secret up to 70 years and matters of fortifications up to 150 years. For "top secret" documents there are other rules of access. They are kept in KrA, but if a researcher wants to see such a document and if it is "top secret" also today the decision of access belongs to the Government.

Research aids: Inventories. Many, if not all, are to be found on www.nad.ra.se.

Publications: Meddelanden från Krigsarkivet I-XXVIII, but there are no books concerning the cold war.

access to archival descriptions of records and private papers in archives, libraries and museums in Sweden. It contains data on archival creators from the National Archives with the Military Archives, the 8 Regional State Archives, the City Archives of Malmö, and the manuscript divisions of the Royal Library and the University Libraries of Uppsala, Lund and Gothenburg.

NAD is also providing a complete register of all archives in Sweden, including archives within libraries, museums, local authorities, and other organizations. This register now contains contact information and links to home pages of more than 700 archives. The site also contains a guide to the history of local administration in Sweden and links to other archival resources.

Holdings: The National Archives is one of the oldest public agencies in Sweden dating back to the middle ages. Today, the National Archives has the supervision of all public records of the agencies of the central Government, while it delegates to the regional archives the supervision of records generated by regional and local authorities. The Military Archives and SVAR (Svensk Arkivinformation) are also part of the National Archives.

The National Archives holds documents from the central administration of the Swedish state and from private archives – both personal, business' and associations archives. The holdings of the National Archives – for examples the documents of the Swedish Ministry of Foreign Affairs (Utrikesdepartementet) or the Security Police (SÄPO) – are central for the research on Contemporary Swedish history and on the history of the Cold War. The archive also holds Photograph, map, and news paper collections.

Holdings: Archives from each ministry. The principle is that the Government Offices Archives store closed files/records that were closed five years ago or earlier. The Government Offices Archives only store the archives for ten to fifteen years. The older material is stored at the National Archives, the more modern, still open files/records, are stored at the ministries. The Government Offices Archives consist of:

- Cabinet minutes
- Ministry minutes
- Government Offices minutes
- Draft government decisions
- Registers
- Cabinet files
- Ministry files
- Cabinet ministers' correspondence

Documentation from certain delegations and working groups is kept at the Government Offices Archives. A collection of foreign ministry documents concerning Raoul Wallenberg is also available. The time period for the documents concerning Raoul Wallenberg is: 1944-2001. There are also CDs and audio recordings relating to specific issues.

Special collections: Collection of historical interviews: Videotapes of the Government's press conferences.

Private archives: Cabinet ministers archives.

Holdings: Statistics Sweden is a central government authority for official statistics and other government statistics. It was established in 1858. Initially, its operations focused overwhelmingly on population statistics, but gradually other branches of statistics were added, such as agricultural statistics, statistics on local government finances, savings banks statistics and poor relief statistics. In 1962 a process of centralisation began in public statistics and greater responsibility passed to Statistics Sweden. In 1994 much of the responsibility for official statistics in defined sectoral areas was transferred from Statistics Sweden to 24 other government authorities. Statistics Sweden continued to be responsible for multi-sectoral statistics, while other authorities were made responsible for other parts of the statistics.

The archives mainly contain primary data, forms and raw tables/employment tables that contain more information than those tables that have been published.

The Swedish National Archives (Riksarkivet) have received nearly all statistical materials dating from 1858 to about 1970.

Access: Release of documents is regulated by the Swedish Secrecy Act, chapter 9 section 4. Information concerning individuals is held confidential for 70 years. Information on enterprises remains confidential for 20 years. There is a possibility (after investigation of consequential damage) to release confidential information for research purposes. Documents from the archives are available preferably on our premises. It may also be possible to borrow material after approval from the National Archives.

Research aids: Several databases for statistics (for example Eurostat).

Publications: Periodical: SCB:s kundtidning Källa:SCB.

Holdings: The House of Emigrants comprises an archive, library, museum, and research centre. It also sponsors conferences and seminars, as well as celebrations, festivals, and temporary exhibitions with the themes of emigration, migration, and integration.

It was established in 1965. Its original purpose was to preserve records, interviews, and memorabilia relating to the period of major Swedish emigration between 1846 and 1930 when 1,3 million (about 20%) of the Swedish population left the country. With the tremendous influx of immigrants to Sweden in recent decades, the Institute has expanded its mission to include the documentation of the emigrant experience of those who have left their own homelands for Sweden. Because emigration from one's homeland and integration into a new society are universal human experiences, understanding the Swedish emigrant experience provides a key to fostering the integration of those who are establishing themselves in their new country, Sweden.

Archives: The manuscript collection consists of original documents, microfilms, sound recordings and photographs. In 1966 a still ongoing inventory of emigrant letters, diaries, photos and other documents from the emigration epoch (1846-1930) was initiated. Since 1968, the Swedish church and society records in America have been microfilmed. The sound archive contains about 3,000 interviews with Swedish-Americans plus thousands of recordings made in Sweden. This material has been complemented by microfilms of population census manuscripts, church archives from Sweden, passenger lists, registers for passport applications etc. The repository consists of thousands of documents, including the Vilhelm Moberg collection as well as the collections of Otto R. Landelius, Arthur Landfors and Rudolph Oslund.

Library: Sweden's most complete book collection on emigration is available at The House of Emigrants. The holdings consist of Swedish-American imprints – mostly Swedish-language literature printed in the US – as well as books on emigration published in Sweden or abroad. Via LIBRIS Computer Register the library is connected with the emigration collections of the Royal Library in Stockholm. About 250 Swedish-American periodicals are available on microfilm. Press clippings on such topics as emigration, family history, Swedish-America, etc., are continuously collected from contemporary Swedish newspapers and indexed on computer. To keep the literature accessible at the House of Emigrants, loans outside the house are not permitted.

Special collections: Photograph collection and collection of historical interviews.

Research aids: The research room is equipped with microfilm readers, a xerox and computer service. The extensive source material on emigration and family history is easily accessed and explained by research assistants.

Open: Tuesday- Friday 12:00-16:00

Holdings: Initially a foundation the archive's main task was to index and systematize Swedish traditional song material. During the 1960's economic and personnel resources increased through state subsidies. In 1968 the SVA started to do field recordings. Since then the archive collects both vocal and instrumental folk music. Since 1968 SVA has recorded folk music throughout Sweden by visiting individual folk musicians and singers. We also record entire folk music gatherings, seminars on folk singing and many other occasions. In collaboration with other institutions we have also documented street musicians in Stockholm and children's playground traditions. SVA now has approx. 40,000 musical items of folk songs and instrumental folk music on tape. A further 40,000 items are copies from original recordings – phonograph cylinders, cassettes, etc. – from other institutions and private sources. Visitors are welcome to listen to copies of our recordings.

Special collections: Manuscript collection: SVA's manuscript collection in the original is comparatively small, however. There are many larger collections in the possession of various institutions in Sweden and Finland. As a folk music centre SVA strives to survey the whole of the existing Swedish folk music material. For this reason, a great deal of the material in some 50 archives, museums and libraries, as well as private collections, have been registered and copied for SVA. Thus scholars and others with an interest in folk music may conveniently study material from all over the country, covering a period of over 400 years. We also have copies of printed material, most of it chapbooks, „skillingtryck“, with song texts. The largest collection of chapbooks is in the Royal Library, Stockholm. SVA also has a number of original chapbooks. It includes: song books written during the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries (the majority are from the decades around 1900), music manuscripts left by country fiddlers and other musicians and song texts and music written down by collectors.

The tape collection: consists of 2000 reels and 4000 cassettes and 70 DAT cassettes with recorded interviews, radio programs, private recordings, copies of tapes and acetates etc. which have been lent to the Jazz collections. From the estate of pianist Lars Werner the Jazz Department has received a substantial collection: 200 reels and 300 cassettes containing unique recordings of many of the Swedish bebop musicians of the 1950s and 60s.

A large collection of Alice Babs own recordings of 78s is in the archives, copied onto tape. A substantial collection of Alice Babs arrangements, posters and scrapbooks is also part of the archive. From the family of radioproducer Claes Dahlgren the Jazz Department has received around 600 reels of tape for copying. The original tapes are now stored at the National Archive of Recorded Sound and Moving Images (ALB). This collection contains Dahlgren's popular weekly radio programs which were transmitted from the USA during the 1950s, '60s and '70s. This collection also contains recorded interviews with American jazz musicians. From the estate of Benny Aaslund the archive achieved a collection of more than 1500 open reel tapes, cassettes, VHS-cassettes etc. From the estate of pianist Rolf Hedén, Hedemora the archive acquired more than 4500 tapes, cassettes containing radioprogramms from mid 1950s to mid 1990s.

VHS cassette collection: The Jazz Department of the SVA contains 750 VHS cassettes of jazz, mostly recorded from television but also private recordings and some films. 1995 the collection increased with 225 VHS cassettes containing rawmaterial from the Swedish Educational Broadcasting Company: (UR) TV-documentary Swedish Jazzhistory (Svensk Jazzhistoria). A donation of 70 VHS cassettes was given by Rolf & Birgit Sandin.

Access: Anyone has access to the archive.

Research aids: The archive has a catalogue over its holdings on the internet. A catalogue can also be found at the archive. Furthermore, it is possible to mail the archive to get help finding the right record.

1st of May	Thursday-Friday	08:30-16:00
1st of June to	Monday-Friday	09:00-16:00
1st of August

Holdings: The Uppsala Regional Archives (ULA) contain records generated by regional and local state authorities, as well as the population registration records kept by the church. There are also some collections from industries and private persons, although mainly before 1945. There are no records from political parties or trade unions at ULA. All in all, the collections comprise more than 30 000 meters of material, mainly from the 17th to the 20th century.

The region from which ULA keeps records covers the following counties (län): Dalarna (before 2002: Kopparberg), Södermanland, Uppsala, Västmanland and Örebro.

Directly relevant for Cold War studies are records from county administrative boards (länsstyrelse). Every county administrative board had a civil defence section (civilförsvarssektion) during the years 1953-1971. Its predecessor from the war years to 1952 was the defence division (försvarsavdelning). In 1971 the county administrative boards were reorganized and the civil defence section was replaced by a civil defence unit (civilförsvarshet). These sections/units made plans for the protection of the civil population in wartime. Their tasks included city evacuation plans, bomb shelters, food supplies, and training of rescue personnel. ULA keeps civil defence records from the counties of Södermanland, Västmanland and Uppsala. The records contain both open and secret documents. The latter are classified for a period of 40 years (see below).

ULA also keeps records from local and regional police authorities. (Before 1965, the term for the countryside district police was landsfiskal.) The majority of documents in these archives concern criminal cases. In addition, there are often different kinds of registers, e.g. of foreign citizens in the district.

A large part of the collection derives from district courts. Before 1971, the term in the countryside was häradsrätt, while the town courts were called rådhusrätt. These files contain judgements and protocols from the proceedings. In 1971 the court system was reorganized. Most of the material from the new district courts (tingsrätter) is still kept at the courts. An exception is estate inventories, which have been delivered to ULA.

Access: Everybody is welcome to visit the regional archives. Access to public sources is according to the right-of-access in principle free, unless the Official Secrets Act (SFS 1980:100) states otherwise. The time limit in matters concerning defence and national security is normally 40 years, which applies to the classified parts of the archives from the county administrative board's civil defence sections and civil defence units. Some material in the police and court archives may also be classified.

Research aids: The National Archival Database (NAD, www.nad.ra.se) gives an overview of the collections. However, NAD does not always provide details about the contents of individual archives. In most of these cases there are archival inventories on paper.

Contact: Tina Duelund

Activity: The Danish Atlantic Treaty Association (DATA) is a non-governmental organization (NGO), independent of economical and party political interests. The activities of the Atlantic Treaty Association is based on a cross political foundation, which in turn is based on the perception of Denmark as an internationally engaged country, leading active national security and foreign politics.

With its starting point in the transatlantic cooperation with the United States of America and Canada and in the Euro-Atlantic values such as democracy, human rights and a free market economy, the Danish Atlantic Treaty Association establishes contact between decision makers, experts, and voters when it comes to politics concerning national security, including the cooperation within NATO and the EU. This contact is established via national as well as international seminars, lectures, debates, excursions, publications and books on current security political issues. Furthermore, DATA seeks to support and help establish new public organizations based on national security politics in Central and Eastern Europe, including Russia and the Balkans.

The history of Europe has from the Thirty Years War and onwards to the two World Wars in the 20th century been a history of war. The termination of the Cold War has given our generation an unusual chance to further develop the peace that has prevailed for the past 50 years, only this time for all of Europe. The Atlantic Treaty Association is committed to draw upon over 50 years of experience in cooperating with NATO in order to set an example for the generations to come.

Archive: No public archive, but we do have a number of publications on various current topics, such as The Caricature Crisis. Furthermore, we have a large variety of NATO-material.

Access: Publications and other material can be accessed/ordered by our web-site.

Activity: Danske Gardehusarforeninger is an association of 13 local Independent societies with a membership of 1600 veterans from Gardehusarregimentet (the Guard Hussar Regiment). Danske Gardehusarforeninger is unpolitical. The members are united in their positive bearing of national security and defence.

The object of the association is to maintain and strengthen the solidarity with and keep the relations to the regiment and to prove that the association publicly appears as a whole.

It is advanced by publishing our membership magazine “Gardehusaren” in cooperation with the regiment.

Another function of the association is to keep the relations internal between the association and the local societies and external in relation to the outer world.

Danske Garderhusarforening cooperates with other associations in their effort to support the defence and award prizes to soldiers on active service and veterans.

It will always be in the local societies where hussars and their family members cultivate friendship due to the fact that cohesiveness and individual interest are important elements in our activity.

Activity: Since 1948, the International European Movement has played an essential role in the process of European integration by exercising its influence on European and national institutions. It fought in favour of the direct election of the European Parliament by all European citizens, in favour of the Treaty on the European Union and for a European Constitution. One of its major functions during the 1950s through to the 1990s was the setting up of think tanks and a network of mobilization in the democratic countries of Europe and in countries subjected to totalitarian regimes.

As part of the International European Movement, the Danish European Movement has shared these goals and visions. In Denmark, the Movement is mainly based on private membership, from individual members. The Danish European Movement is especially active during campaigns ahead of referendums on European issues, but maintains a wide range of activities between referendum campaigns as well. These activities includes public debates, letters to the press, newsletters, publications and face to face contact, all to promote the knowledge and support of European Cooperation and the EU, among the Danish population.

The association was founded by Frederik Bajer in 1882, and was then named "The association for Denmark's Neutralization", and from 1885 "Danish Peace Association". After World War 1 the association once again changed its name, this time to "Danish Peace and League of Nations Association". After World War 2 the association changed its name yet again this time to its present name.

The aim of the association is to increase the interest in the United Nation and to create an understanding for the nations' mutual dependence and common responsibility for international development. And thirdly, to realise the principles the United Nation rests upon.

The association's records can be found in the national archive.

Långa Raden 8.

Tel.: (+46) 0 87 92 43 26
www.mtbveteraner.org

Contact: Claes Ernow

Research area: The ambition of the Association of the MTB-veterans is to do research on the history of the torpedo boats and to document their history. In the association people are gathering with a connection to or with an interest in the Swedish motor torpedo boats (Svenskt torpedbåtsvapen). The intention is to safeguard and to preserve motor torpedo boats – if possible in a working condition. The association attempt through demonstrations of motor torpedo boats and other material as well as through lectures and showings of movies to stimulate a broader public interest in the history of motor torpedo boats and the Swedish marine.

Holdings: Motor Torpedo Boat T26.

Folk rörelsen Nej till EU Peoples' Movement No to the European Union

Pölgatan 5.

Tel.: (+46) 03 17 01 01 77
e-mail: kansli@nejtill.eu.se
www.nejtill.eu.se

Activity: The People's Movement No to the European Union is a politically independent association. The PMNEU took active part in the campaign against the European Monetary Union (EMU) in 2003. In 1994 it worked against a Swedish membership of the EU. Since Sweden became an EU-member the association has postulated that Sweden should be an independent country. The aim of its activity is that Sweden should leave the EU. The association wants a new petition for a referendum about a continued membership for Sweden in the EU.

The Association is organized in several local groups in different parts of Sweden. The activities include meetings, leaflets, the Periodical „Kritiska EU-fakta“ (EU critical facts) and other publications.

Publications: Periodical „Kritiska EU-fakta“ (EU critical facts), and other publications.

Open:	Monday-Thursday	09:00-14:00
-------	-----------------	-------------

Holdings: Basically the collection deals with the history of “Fynske Livregiment” (in English “The Funen Life Regiment”) in war and peace since 1614. Maps, equipment, company flags, medals, weapons, military music and music books, personal effects, personal letters, uniforms of 377 years infantry service are represented in a detailed variety and including photo albums, scrapbooks and press cuttings from the last 70 years. Another collection “The cavalry at Funen from 1670 – 1911” represents a smaller collection of equipment and weapons. “The German Occupation of Denmark 1940 – 1945”, the German attack and the battle at the border in South Jutland (with the participation of The Funen Life Regiment), the establishment of the Danish Brigade in Sweden (DANFORCE) and the history of the contemporary Danish Resistant Movement with the emphasis at the island of Funen is another central point. The last part of the collection enters the post World War II conditions with the emphasis on the Danish Home Guard which was founded as a result of and developed during the entire Cold War. A special section describes the contribution of the 2,500 Danish soldiers who voluntarily joined the UK Forces 1945 – 48, covering personal letters, regimental cap badges, trench art, army magazines and “souvenirs” from the 42 regiments and the 19 countries they met. The Danish participation in operations or as observers from the late forties to our time in more than 50 countries under the UN, NATO and EU auspices is on view with uniforms, weapons and “souvenirs” from numerous of these activities.

Special collections: Book collection: A large number of books in the collection are reflecting the Danish Resistance Movement, the history of The Home Guard and the many years following aspects of the “Cold War” (see “Bogsamling” ~ “library” at the home page). The books are all donated to the collection from historically interested people or people being personally involved in different actions and who have left personal notes or letters inside several of the donations.

Access: The collection is open to anyone.

Research aids: The collection has a research service, which can assist with lectures, exhibitions and guidance to pupils, students, teachers and researchers at schools and universities.

Andkærvej 19.

Tel.: (+45) 75 84 08 98
e-mail: sla@lokalarkiver.dk
www.danskearkiver.dk

The SLA is an association of local archives in Denmark. It has over 400 members, spread out over 13 districts, each of which covers one of the former counties. Through the association the members can help each other. An important part of the SLA's work is to develop a homogeneous registration system among the member archives. This has resulted in the electronic catalogue ARKIBAS.

Holdings: The SLA does not itself hold any records, the records are found in the member archives. Since there are over 400 of these, it is difficult to list the records all archives have. But local archives usually have records from local administrations, companies, associations and private persons.

Special collections: Some archives have special collections, these can be:

- Photograph collection
- News paper collection
- Company archives
- Archives from local organisations

Access: Anyone has access to the archives. Records containing sensitive information are usually open after 75 years, but it is possible for researchers to obtain a dispensation. This is done by contacting the archive.

Research aids: This will vary from archive to archive. Some archives have copy machines. And some archives can make research on request.

Publications: S sammenslutningen af lokalarkiver: Arkivejviser 2007. Vejle, 2007. (Guide to the different archives, a new edition is published every year).

Research area: The contemporary history research of the department includes a variety of topics. Among these are Scandinavian and German history and culture as well as Scandinavian-German relations in the 20th century, German intelligence in Scandinavia 1920-1950, East Germany and Scandinavia Comics as sources for historical studies – propaganda, gender, mentality.

The department arranged the interdisciplinary Baltic Seminar. The Seminars were held on Gotland from 1963 to 1993 – during the Cold War to the 1980's bringing researchers from different Baltic countries and from both sides of the Cold War together. The Seminars became a revival 2005 with the "Östersjön från Andra världskriget till Kalla Kriget".

Research area: Research areas are history didactics and religious change. The first mentioned concerns how scholars encounter history using history textbooks used in Swedish schools during the 20th century. Threatening situations during the Cold War are frequently described in history textbooks. The research shows how these situations and events were presented and how they are connected to domestic contexts and to scholars' experiences and daily lives. The second research area deals with Swedish social democratic church politics in the period 1944-1973 (2006). It focuses on how the social democrats adopted the idea of a national church (The Folk Church) and imbued it with new meaning on the basis of the so-called social democratic vision of the People's Home. Furthermore the research looks into the shift in mentality towards Europe and European integration during the Cold war era.

Research area: In terms of contemporary history, we have particular strong points in teaching and researching Cold War history, with the international and national role of Denmark/Scandinavia during (and even after) the Cold War as a natural focus point, including Danish and Scandinavian transatlantic relations after 1945.

We also offer courses on Danish contemporary history (political, social, and cultural) from a European perspective. Research and teaching on the Second World War and the German occupation of Denmark are also carried out.

Furthermore, researching and teaching domestic and foreign politics of the United States in the 20th Century are done at our History Section, as well as research and teaching in German, South East European, Middle East and South East Asian contemporary history, with special emphasis on relations between national state, power, culture, and modernity throughout most of the 20th Century.

Contact: Professor Kim Salomon

Research area: The Department has a chair in International History (Kim Salomon) and two further professors (Kristian Gerner and Klas-Göran Karlsson) who are specialized in international history. Moreover, Lund has a long tradition of research on the contemporary history of Europe and North America. The focus has been on political and cultural dimensions in a wider perspective. Concepts such as ethnicity, identity, regionalism and social movements have been important, including projects such as Sweden's Stable Peace, Eastern Europe and the New Russia, Migration and Xenophobia, Habsburg as a Model for the European Development.

In recent years, a shift towards cultural history and history culture has occurred. Within two larger research projects with specific relevance to the Cold War era, "The Holocaust and the European Historical Culture" (contact: Klas-Göran Karlsson) and "Cold War Narratives" (contact: Kim Salomon), many books and articles have been published in the early 2000s. Both projects apply a hermeneutic approach to the study of postwar international history combining political and cultural perspectives.

In addition, a number of minor projects (comprising one or a small group of scholars) deal with contemporary history, including issues of the radical movements of the 1960s and 1970s in Sweden and Western Europe, the culture of civil defence in the Cold War era, the experiences of and confrontation with National Socialism after 1945, peacekeeping and the United Nations, Eastern Europe in the postcommunist world etc.

Research area: Nationalism has been studied under the European Studies program and this has led to research topics such as World War I, World War II and Holocaust. Focus is directed at new topics such as migration, ethnicity and globalization.

Totalitarianism vs. Democracy, domestic politics, the struggle between the Danish communist party and the Danish Social Democratic Party are being studied in a cold war perspective where a research program – Guerrillas and grassroots – look closer at the Danish youth movement in the 1960s and 1970s. All kinds of intelligence relations have been described in several publications.

Different cultural studies have put focus on gender, family relations and travel experiences amongst other topics. Studies are being made in environmental history where, for example, the relationship between man and the sea is being scrutinized.

Contact: Professor Dr. Birgitta E. Almgren and Dr. Charlotta Brylla

Research area: The issues of our research-project at Södertörn University College Contact and Conflict. Sweden – GDR. Politics and Rhetorics around the Baltic Sea differ from earlier Sweden-GDR-research through the focus on rhetorics and ideology. To investigate mutual influences and relations three dimensions are observed:

1. linguistic usage from a historical semantic perspective
2. communication of concepts, ideas, opinions and visions
3. interaction

The aim of our project is to investigate the intercultural processes, the mutual influences in schools and universities and the efforts of the GDR to build networks and to influence curricula, textbooks and education in Sweden. Charlotta Brylla is investigating the image of the GDR in Sweden, to which extent for instance the GDR-language usage and their concept of socialism was taken over by presentations in Swedish papers.<sup>40</sup> A further aim of the project is to reflect the linguistic perspective of the GDR public diplomacy. Culture was an important tool in the strategies of GDR to gain diplomatic recognition and understanding for their political system, promoting a positive image of the GDR, in the same way as NS-Germany used public diplomacy, culture propaganda and built networks in order to “conquer the Swedish soul”.<sup>41</sup> Under the cloak of traditional classic culture the Nazi regime attracted Swedish intellectuals and infiltrated schools and universities in Sweden. GDR took over the methods to promote understanding and build positive images outside the GDR. There is an obvious continuity in structures and methods of the GDR-officials and to spread ideology. The similarities of rhetoric and argumentative strategies in the Third Reich and the Cold War are striking, although the content of course differs.<sup>42</sup> Our research both in archives in Germany and Sweden as interviews show the dynamics of communist ideology, the structures of power and participation in the GDR dictatorship. It was a question of conviction, dreams and fascination.

Research area: The Unit is conducting multidisciplinary research in cooperation with other institutions within social sciences and humanity. In focus are comparisons between Sweden and Germany in a global, European and regional perspective. Four research areas are prioritized; Culture in a broad sentence, welfare, International relations and civil society.

In all these four areas the situation in both the Eastern and Western parts of Germany are studied. After the German reunion two completely different political, economical, social and cultural systems was supposed to merge. This situation is unique and today we can still see confrontations in the four areas mentioned above.

Research area: The Institute of Contemporary History (SHI) at Södertörn University College (Södertörns högskola) conducts research in political history. The research focuses on the present-day, often on current issues such as the place of women in politics, Swedish conservatism and Conservative political parties, the development of social democracy, changes in public administration, education policy, equal opportunities policy, or the significance of agriculture on politics. The majority of research deals with Swedish issues although the intention is to extend this perspective.

SHI is active on several networks, on a national and international level. We have contacts with scholars and universities in other countries and regularly welcome visiting researchers to the Institute.

Research area: Centre for Multiethnic Research is a cross-disciplinary forum for the study of cultural issues, social phenomena and processes of change related to the ethnic dimensions of life. The field of study also covers ethnic relations and processes in multicultural societies, as well as the effects of international migration within recipient cultures.

The activities of the Centre focus on research, postgraduate education, documentation, and public information. One of its main objectives is to stimulate and initiate studies on ethnicity at Uppsala University. Another objective is to function on resources within the university, for the research education programs and for the undergraduate curriculum.

The Centre's activities emphasize primarily the cultural dimensions of ethnicity. Language, cultural and religious issues are central research areas, and the historical dimension is essential. The international aspect of this field allows for a broad and cross-disciplinary character. Competitive research recognizes the importance of impulses from a variety of fields, for example, the social sciences, judicial sciences and social medicine.

On these bases, the Centre works toward cooperative research and the rapprochement of scholarly work on culture and social sciences in terms of developing theories and methodology. While the perspective taken is a global one, the Swedish situation is given special emphasis.

Research area: Concerning Swedish history, the Department of History at the University of Uppsala covers the entire time span, from medieval to contemporary history. The main chronological focus, however, is on early modern, 19th- and 20th-century history. Traditionally the research on early modern history has addressed questions pertaining to the relationship between state, society and individual, focusing on material conditions and their interplay with immaterial ones. The research on 19th-century Swedish history has above all dealt with the transformation of feudal society, the construction of national identities and how the subject was gradually replaced by the citizen. It has been of great importance for the understanding of 19th-century Sweden. The investigations into the nation-building processes have also given rise to research at the Department on xenophobia, anti-Semitism, refugee policy, and to Holocaust and Genocide studies. Demographic history is also one of the emphases of the Department.

One of the research areas of the Department deals with nationalism, the construction of Swedish disposition, a field that has also evolved both into studies of xenophobia, anti-Semitism and Swedish refugee policy and into investigations of the Welfare State and small state theory and policy. Another area of research is gender studies and in particular the relationships between gender and historical change.

Current research projects in the field of contemporary history are for example "Gender ideals in twentieth-century media" and "The use and function of politicians' private lives in news reporting in 20th Century Sweden".<sup>43</sup> development aid history. These topics are approached from a Danish and Nordic perspective as well as from a broader European perspective. These topics are dominant both in the teaching and research portfolios within the department. The institute also hosts a Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence – an interdisciplinary Centre set up in collaboration with the Department of Political Science and specializing in European integration issues. Cold War history is also more sporadically included in the teaching and research activities of the other departments within the institute, for example within the Departments of Slavonic Studies and East Asian Studies.

Research area: With the help of a grant from the Jean Monnet Action, a Jean Monnet Centre has been established at the University of Aarhus from autumn 1999. The grant holder in charge at the University of Aarhus is Thorsten Brorring Olesen, Department of History. The other members of the board are Jean Monnet professors Knud Erik Jørgensen, Department of Political Science, Associate Professor Johnny Laursen, Department of History, Hans Henrik Holm, The Danish School of Journalism and Jean Monnet professor Uffe Østergaard from Centre for European Cultural Studies. The Department of History is responsible for administrating the Jean Monnet Centre.

As mentioned above, the task of the Jean Monnet Centre is to collect and distribute information about the research on European integration. It has been placed at the University of Aarhus because of the university's long-standing and very broad interest in the field. As early as 1973 the State and University Library established a European documentation centre, and during the 1990s the University of Aarhus, represented by the departments supporting the Jean Monnet Centre, has obtained numerous grants for setting-up Jean Monnet chairs, courses and modules.

The Jean Monnet Centre has arranged a number of different activities. At the University of Aarhus a series of Jean Monnet lectures has been held from 1999 to 2007 under the heading: „European Integration and Denmark's Participation“. The series of Jean Monnet lectures are a recurring activity and are given by lecturers affiliated to the Centre as well as by external lecturers. The lectures are aimed at students at the Faculty of Arts and the Faculty of Social Sciences. Active participants (those participating in more than 80% of the lectures) receive a certificate of participation. In addition to this, the Centre has organised guest lectures, seminars, symposiums and conferences.

One of the primary activities is the Jean Monnet Newsletter, which is published four times a year. In addition to articles on specific topics, each newsletters contain an outline of all activities within the Centre as well as outlines of relevant courses on Europe and events at the University of Aarhus. Furthermore, it also covers select activities at other Danish institutions of higher education. Any information about such activities will be appreciated by the secretariat of the Jean Monnet Centre. Everyone who is interested in receiving the newsletter is welcome to contact the secretariat. A printed version as well as an Internet version of the newsletter will be available.

Research area: The Danish Institute for International Studies (DIIS) is an independent research institution engaged in research on international affairs. The institute draws up reports and analyses and follows development in international affairs continuously in order to assess the security and foreign policy situation of Denmark, e.g. aspects of relevance with regard to development policy. DIIS also communicates research findings, analyses and knowledge and performs functions concerning documentation, information and library services. Furthermore, DIIS contributes to the education of researchers, supports the development of research capacity in developing countries and establishes contacts between Danish and international research environments. DIIS's research and activities are organized in several research units and a few major commissioned works.

In 2005 DIIS published an account about Denmark during the Cold War (Denmark under den kolde krig. Den sikkerhedspolitiske situation 1945-1991, 2005).

Research area: FOI is a civilian governmental research agency under the aegis of the ministry of defence. Almost all our work is based on commissions from customers. FOI's Department of Defence Analysis provides research and analytic support to customers, traditionally mainly to the defence sector of government, but now increasingly also for civilian agencies and institutions, as well as for businesses.

Several of the senior colleagues at our division worked with analysis of politico-military affairs and security policy during the 1970s and 1980s, and with support of Baltic security during the 1990s. Although they are currently working on contemporary matters for our customers, they possess considerable expertise and experience on matters such as net assessment, conventional and nuclear arms control, naval strategic matters, Soviet politics and policies, Baltic security, and peace support operations.

As for ongoing analysis and research on current matters of a strategic, security policy or politico-military nature, one could mention Russian foreign- and defence policies, Nordic-Baltic security, Euro-Atlantic security, security in Asia, energy security, defence industrial matters, civilian crisis response, military peace-support operations, civilian-military coordination, and crisis management. We are planning to add a program on African security.

One of us (Robert Dalsjö) has recently completed a doctoral thesis on Sweden's covert preparations for military cooperation with the West during the Cold War. It is available as a book in English with the title Life-Line Lost (Stockholm: Santérus Academic Press, 2006). An overview of the book and some documents are available at <http://www.php.isn.ethz.ch/collections/colltopic.cfm?lng=en&id=29456>

Although Dalsjö currently works on contemporary matters, he is planning a series of articles on Cold War History, based on material not used in the thesis.

Research area: The task of Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI) is to conduct research on questions of conflict and cooperation of importance for international peace and security, with the aim of contributing to an understanding of the conditions for peaceful solutions of international conflicts and for a stable peace.

With the collections of hard data and precise facts SIPRI renders accessible impartial information on weapon developments, arms transfers and production, military expenditure, as well as on arms limitations, reductions and disarmament. All research at SIPRI is based exclusively on open sources. For the current fields of research see the home page of SIPRI.

Research aids: SIPRI offers an Integrating Fact Database in the field of International Relations and Security called FIRST (Facts on International Relations and Security Trends). The FIRST system offers researchers, politicians and the media an authoritative and structured factual reference system on international relations and security trends. It contains high-quality, up-to-date and clearly documented information in areas such as: conflicts, arms transfers and military expenditure, hard facts on states and international organizations, economic and social statistics and chronologies. The system allows the user to search through more than 40 databases from different institutes around the world through a single user-friendly interface.

Publications: SIPRI Yearbooks on Armaments, Disarmament and International Security, SIPRI publication series include SIPRI Research Reports, the SIPRI Chemical & Biological Warfare Studies series and SIPRI Policy Papers. Furthermore: monographs, multi-author volumes, fact sheets, press releases and CD ROMs.

Open:	Monday-Sunday	10:00-16:00 <sup>57</sup>
1st of April to
31st October

The Aalborg Defence- and Garrison museum covers all parts of the Danish total Defence organization. Many exciting exhibitions tell the story of development within the Army, the Air Force, The Home Guard, the Police and the Rescue Services with a clear emphasis on the period of the Second World War. Furthermore, you find comprehensive exhibitions on the occupation period in Denmark 1940 to 1945 and on Aalborg as an important garrison city since 1779.

The museum is located in a historically interesting building in the western part of Aalborg – a huge hangar with side buildings, erected by the Germans at the seaplane base they established at Aalborg in 1940. The museum has a well-equipped military library.

The museum is co-publisher of a book with the title: Danish Army Vehicles 1945 to 2005.

Open:	Monday-Sunday	10:00-16:00
-------	---------------	-------------

The intention of the museum is to describe the life of the Danish industrial workers from about 1870 and until about 2000: the migration from country to town, the years of depression in the 1930s, the economic after-war boom and the "golden age" of the worker's movement in the 1960s. It stresses everyday life of the workers, their homes, life conditions, culture etc. Workers' homes from various periods are reconstructed as well as streets from the 1950s. A restaurant serves old fashion of Danish food.

<sup>57</sup> Open: 1st of April to 31st of October, week 7 and 8 all days 10 to 16 (June, July and August until 17).

Cold War perspectives: From 30th of August 2006 the museum has shown the temporary exhibition "Dagligdag i en delt verden – danskerne og den kolde krig 1947-60" (Everyday life in a world divided – the Danes and the Cold War 1947-60) made by Margit Bech Larsen. It deals with Denmark in the Cold War, showing propaganda posters, examples of war fear etc. A movie with the same title, (produced by M. B. Larsen/ Academic Support Centre, but not by the museum) is connected to the exhibition. A few objects of the museum are used, most of it belonging to private owners or the archives.

Some of our permanent exhibitions indirectly touch Cold War themes, especially "1950'erne – en udstilling om arbejderfamilien" (1950s – An exhibition on the working family) that among other things shows aspects of the growing American cultural influence on Danish everyday life (such as fashion and dancing) as a successful competitor of the Soviet Union.

Some of the museum's art collections illustrate Cold War motives and political statements. They have been shown at temporary exhibitions whose publications/catalogues often deal with the cultural Cold-War debate (art as a political weapon, discussions on "socialist realism" etc., see Publications below)

Collections: The museum has no special Cold War collections but material of interest might be found within other collections (photos, drawings, posters). A much larger material is to be found in The Workers' Movements Library and Archives (ABA) connected to the museum. One larger art collection must be mentioned here:

Drawings by Herluf Bidstrup. A large collection of cartoons, comics and art drawings of the Danish communist artist Herluf Bidstrup (1912-88) donated by his daughter Lena Bidstrup who has the copyright in case of printing. Many examples of political cartoons of Cold War interest (also see below). They are now being recorded.

Access: The museum's art historian and responsible for art collections:

Hanne Abildgaard (e-mail: ha@arbejdermuseet.dk).

Publications: Torkil Adersen: Kold Krig og kiksekage. Arbejderfamilien mellem storpolitik og hverdagstrængsler. Skoletjenesten/ Arbejdermuseet, 2004. (Only in Danish. A popular description of the daily life of Danish workers about 1945-60 viewed in the perspective of the Cold War. Intended for 16-19 year old pupils).

Jette Bie Junker og Thomas Lyngby (ed.): Victor Brockdorff. Cathrinesminde Teglværk/ Arbejdermuseet 2001. (English summary. A catalogue of the outstanding Danish socialist realist painter. Three articles deal with the sometimes very hard Cold War art debate in Denmark.)

Hanne Abildgaard (ed.): Herluf Bidstrup. Satire og humor. Arbejdermuseet og Arbejderbevægelsens Bibliotek og Arkiv 2004. (Only in Danish. A richly illustrated catalogue and partly a biography about the cartoonist, especially about his career during the Cold War as one of the leading and sharpest Danish spokesmen of the east.)

Flemming Johansen, Benedicte Bojesen og Hanne Abildgaard (ed.): Hans Scherfig. Sophienholm/ Arbejdermuseet og Arbejderbevægelsens Bibliotek og Arkiv 2005. (Only in Danish. An illustrated catalogue about the Danish communist satiric writer and painter. Some articles about Scherfig and anti-Americanism.)

The Danish Aviation Museum is a business owned trust, that was founded on 19th of April 1975. Until 2007 the museum was named The Danish Vintage Airplane Collection. The museum has home at Stauning Airport. A newly established building contains the Danish Air Force Museum. The exhibition gives the visitor insight into the development of the Air Force in the past as well as understanding of its contemporary role.

Collections: The collection exhibits the 11 KZ-type aircraft, built in Denmark 1937-1956, for example the old KZ-IV ambulance aircraft. Eight of the aircrafts on display are the only remaining specimen in the world. 16 aircrafts are airworthy. Additionally, you will find a large number of historical items, more than 500 models, a shop, and a cinema.

Open: Monday-Sunday 10:00-16:00

Exhibition including royal saloon cars, restaurant cars and ferries. Daily activities: Rides with mini-trains, access to a number of carriages and driver's cabs, simulated ride in the large diesel locomotive.

Special activities: e.g. veteran trains, miniature steam trains and trolley cycles.

Collections: Archive and library: The Danish Railway Museum has an excellent collection of printed specialist literature about railways etc. at home and abroad. The collection is regularly added to via the purchase of new and second-hand books as well as donations. It also includes a complete series of timetables and printed lists of personnel. The collection is open to the public after prior agreement via e-mail to jbmuseum@dsb.dk.

The Danish Railway Museum does not normally collect documents or records. The archive authority for DSB is the State Archives, so searches involving DSB should be carried out either in The Danish National Archives, Copenhagen, or in the relevant regional archives. See www.statensarkiver.dk for documents and records relating to DSB.

The archives of private railway lines is to be found in the regional archives and elsewhere. An overview is available in the publication "Arkivernes Informationsserie: Tog og historie. Jernbanearkiver og deres brug". [Archive Information Series: Trains and History. Railway Archives] by Steen Ousager, 1996.

Even so, material in the form of 'odds and ends' archives from DSB and private railway lines have, over the years, found its way to the museum. Most of this material has not yet been registered and is therefore, for all intents and purposes, not accessible.

There is also material that has been collected by private persons and handed over to The Danish Railway Museum. This has been catalogued according to stretches of track and private railway lines. Contact us at jbmuseum@dsb.dk for answers to specific questions.

The Collection of Drawings at The Danish Railway Museum mainly comprises drawings of all rolling stock. An almost infinite number of detailed drawings belong to every locomotive or every carriage. In connection with building models, it is often sufficient to order copies of the main drawings. Price per copy is DKK 300 excluding VAT.

The collection also includes track diagrams and, to a certain extent, drawings of buildings. Normally, however, drawings of buildings are to be sought in the Record Office, where the drawings have been registered.

The Collection of Illustrations: The Danish Railway Museum has a large collection of illustrations – everything from old glass-plate negatives to more recent colour slides, postcards, prints and paintings.

It is possible – e.g. in connection with research or local or biographical investigations – to see the museum collection of photographs on a particular subject, e.g. a station – possibly with staff, a locomotive or a carriage, a ferry or a bus. Contact the museum in advance at jbmuseum@dsb.dk to arrange an appointment.

It is possible to buy copies of the images. Scanning a photo costs DKK 300 excl. VAT for non-commercial purposes. The scanned image is sent as a file attached to an e-mail. If one or more images are to be supplied on a CD-ROM, the price is DKK 250 excl. VAT. Paper prints or slides according to prices charged by the photographer.

Some of the museum's best illustrations are reproduced in the DSB 150th anniversary publication "På Sporet 1847-1997" [On Track 1847-1997], published by The Danish Railway Museum 1997.

Collection of effects: Apart from the museum effects on display in the museum exhibition there are many effects in storage, e.g. uniforms, tools, oil cans, lamps, enamel signs, inventory from the ticket offices and station offices, telegraphs and telephones, travel effects such as trunks and bags, trade union banners, models of locomotives and carriages as well as tin trains.

Access: There is no admittance to the storage areas, but by applying to jbmuseum@dsb.dk you may get permission to look at particular effects. The museum does, however, reserve the right to decide which type of inquiries can be dealt with – since this can involve considerable resources.

Publications: På sporet 1847-1997. Jernbanerne, DSB og samfundet. Red. Poul Thestrup. Danmarks Jernbanemuseum, 1997.

Collections: As a contemporary museum, the collections include a great variety of commonplace items used in daily life during the Cold War period.

First of all this means items produced on the western side but also Eastern European products such as cameras, CZ motor cycles, the Trabant car and a number of patent application items.

To maintain Danish sovereignty in the Greenland area the Sirius Patrol travelled thousands of miles by dog sleighs in the northeastern part of Greenland. From their base station, the museum has a caterpillar vehicle. To supply the Sirius Patrol from the air and for general surveillance tasks the aircrafts Consolidated Catalina were widely used. This aircraft can be seen at the museum. A number of jet fighters from the Cold War period are also at display.

Open:
1st of September to 30th of June	Monday-Sunday	10:00-17:00
1st of July to 31st of August	Monday-Sunday	10:00-18:00

The Fisheries and Maritime Museum is the largest institution of its kind in Denmark and runs in collaboration with Centre for Maritime and Regional Studies of University of Southern Denmark. The museum focuses on Danish fisheries and marine biology, the tidal wetlands (Wadden Sea), West Jutland coastal shipping and the North Sea offshore industries. So the theme of the museum can truly be said to be „people and the sea“.

Like any other state museum, the Fisheries- and Maritime Museum is committed to collection, registration, preservation, research and consultancy within its particular field of work. This work consumes the majority of the museum's resources, but all this is not really apparent to the museum's visitors. However, these activities form the basis of the museum's informative work, for the books, articles, lectures, videos, films etc.

Collections: Artefacts and archives concerning fisheries in Denmark and shipping from the west coast of Denmark. The museum also has several exhibitions, among these an exhibition about the breakthrough of Danish saltwater fishery.

Access: The museum is open to anyone in the opening hours. Visits outside the opening hours can be arranged. For this, contact the museum.

Publications: The museum publishes the yearbook Sjæklen, that covers the different areas with which the museums works.

1st of May to	Monday to Friday	10:00-17:00
31st of August	Saturday to Sunday	11:00-17:00

Exhibitions: The Army Museums have exhibitions of themes from the post-war period in Oslo, at Oscarsborg Fortress, in Horten, Bergen, Trondheim and Bodø. The most systematized exhibitions of the time are in Bodø, concerning topics like the history of the Air Force, and the special exhibition „From Cold War to warm peace. The threat and the military measures 1945-2000 „at the Norwegian Armed Forces Museum in Oslo. The exhibition in Oslo is problem-related presenting the defined threat to Norway during the period, and the measures taken. In the cold war part it is the mass defence and the defence of our own territory that are in focus. After the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989 (literally shown in the exhibition in the shape of a crumbled wall) it is the new conflicts, first in Europe, then the war against terrorism, that are exhibited. There is a broad coverage of Norwegian participation in the so-called foreign operations. In the museum strategy for the coming years the period after 1945 has been looked upon as an area deserving special attention.

Collections: The Norwegian Armed Forces Museum has a collection of about 100 000 artefacts. A substantial number of these artefacts have provenance to the Cold War era. Types of artefacts range from handguns and uniforms to aircraft and tanks.

The Photo Archive possesses around 100,000 photos. Only a smaller amount is subjected to Contemporary and Cold War history. Some of the main categories of photos from the historical period 1945–2007 are:

Norwegian troops serving in the occupied Germany after WWII (Tysklandsbrigaden). About 1000 photos.

Norwegian troops serving abroad as a part of the UN forces in Congo, Korea, Lebanon etc. About 1500 photos.

NATO photographs from around 1980 to 1990 of tanks, unit weapons, planes, vehicles and training. About 600 photos.

Norwegian troops in Bosnia during the period 1992-1997. About 1000 photos.

Most of the photographs are paper photographs – only a small fraction have so far been scanned and digitalised. When it comes to maps from this period, we only have a few, as for instance the situation map from the first contingent of Norwegian soldiers serving in Lebanon in 1978.

Access: Researchers and scientists can have access to our collections by appointment.

With artefacts and pictures of women's lives from the early beginning of civilization to our own time are illustrated. Recurrent themes in the exhibition are birth, work, learning and everyday life as well as power and powerlessness. In small glimpses you will encounter historical portraits of distinct women and of the women's movements, which have participated in changing our history and circumstances. Everything is very compact – the entire exhibition only takes up app. 100 m<sup>2</sup>.

Collections: Since the foundation in 1982 the museum has collected objects, documents, photos, slides, and biographies to document the lives and heritage of women. This records - for better and for worse - the changes in women's life. The collections cover all sorts of things. From gardening tools to sanitary towels, from book of conduct to trade licences, from snapshots of everyday life to formal portraits of moments of celebration, from oral stories of beatings and abortions to paintings by women artists. The museum records the lives lived with and around each object donated - who made it, who owned it, who used it, when, and for what purpose? The donated objects can have been made out of necessity. They might have been made for trade - for money. Some have been sold and bought, exchanged or given away. They have been used - and sometimes kept, although no longer useful. Some have simply been made and kept as a gesture of love. Many objects speak for themselves. Nevertheless, a given object increases in value for the collection in proportion to the specific, personal information supplied.

Collections: Military and civil aviation exhibitions (12,000 square metres). See website for 3D visualisations.

The Ice Frontier: Cold War exhibition. The National Norwegian Aviation Museum is at present time working on realising a large exhibition about the Cold War – this major museum project has been given the preliminary name “The Ice Frontier”. The Cold War has been a central part of Norwegian aviation history for the last 60 years. The conflict has also influenced and indeed formed development of Norwegian society as a whole, and has provided the basis for the fast growth of strong civil aviation in Norway. Based on the Cold War, The National Norwegian Aviation Museum wishes to focus more closely on some of the central issues connected to Norwegian aviation history and Norwegian history as a whole.

“The Ice Frontier” project is the result of The National Norwegian Aviation Museum having wished for many years to mark the Cold War's history in Norway, in which Northern Norway and Bodø in particular, attracted worldwide attention due to the shooting down of a U-2 aeroplane bound for Bodø over Sverdløvsok in the Soviet Union. The Royal Norwegian Air Force Base in Bodø played an important role during the Cold War. The museum aims to mirror this period of extreme tension – without real war – for the whole country in an international perspective. The heritage from the Cold War with present focus on Barents regional co-operation, strategic politics, resource management and resource conflicts amongst other things will also be illuminated.

“The Ice Frontier” building is to be erected in juxtaposition but connected to the existing museum building just outside Bodø city centre and near the airport (see situation diagram). The building is primarily to be built to house a modern and creative exhibition using interactive methods and technology and science centre methodology. In addition the building will include other types of cultural activity as well as commercial activity.

In order to realise the coming exhibition, the museum has carried out several research projects and will synthesise these studies with new material in order to create a high-quality, exciting and challenging exhibition.

The National Norwegian Aviation Museum will in its work on research and exhibition be assisted by and cooperate with several other institutions in Norway and abroad. We can name The Norwegian Defence Museum, The Institute for Defence Studies in Oslo, the Pomor State University in Arkhangel, Russia, the Cold War International History Project in Washington, DC, USA, and The House of Technology in Luleå, Sweden.

The Maritime Museum of Gothenburg with the Aquarium is one of the most popular sights in the city. The exhibitions show Swedish maritime history from the 17th century to the present.

Collections: The 20th century collection holds exhibitions about several subjects; these being:

The Swedish American Line 1915-1975: Sweden developed a direct service between Gothenburg and New York with the advent of the Swedish American Line. During the first years passengers were emigrants to America and Swedish-Americans returning to Sweden. By the 1920s, a cruise service had begun that would come to dominate the company's business and make it world famous.

World War II: In spite of Sweden's neutrality during the Second World War, several Swedish ships were torpedoed and occasionally hit mines, claiming the lives of many Swedish seamen.

Morden Shipping: The late 20th century saw a marked specialization in ship construction and shipping methods: refrigerated carriers for fruit transportation, oil-tankers, passenger ferries etc. Today standardized transport containers have revolutionized loading techniques on and off purpose-built ships.

Of other collections with relevance for contemporary history can be mentioned The Harbour of Gothenburg collection, the exhibition about shipyards and an exhibition about fishing on the west coast.

Apart from the collections covering contemporary history the museum also has collections about the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries.

Furthermore, the museum has an archive and a library. The archive has approximately 400 meters of records. In the archive a newspaper collection can be found, a photo collection, registrations of ships and nautical maps. The library has a collection of 20,000 titles about maritime history.

The National Museum of Military History is a multi-branch museum specialised in Danish military history and the history of weaponry. The three branches are the Royal Arsenal Museum, the Royal Danish Naval Museum and the Museum Submarine Sælen, which are all located in Copenhagen.

The Royal Danish Arsenal Museum has a fine collection of artillery and hand weapons dating from the Middle Ages to the present.

The Royal Danish Naval Museum regards the historic collection of ship models as its cornerstone. The collection consists of about 400 items, illustrating the technical development of shipbuilding through the last 300 years. The collection contains models of ships, ornamentation and mechanical devices dating as far back as 1669. It is among the finest in the world and is in some respects unique.

Collections: The museum has collected weapons, uniforms etc. from the period of the Cold War. A few of these items and a presentation of the collection methods can be studied at the exhibition "Nyt på Tøjhusmuseet".

Cold War- related research: Naval Officer in the Post Cold War.

The National Maritime museums are doing research concerning the Cold War in a project called Naval Officer in the Post Cold War. The project focuses on the 1980s when The Swedish Navy was occupied in guarding the coasts against suspected foreign submarine transgressions in Swedish costal waters. The perspective has been Swedish Naval officers, their reactions, thoughts, experiences and memories during this dramatic period in Swedish contemporary history. The project has resulted in interviews, biographic stories, memories, documents of different kind, excerpts of newspapers and naval magazines, documents from research proceedings, etc. Reports will be published.

Naval Officer in a new Millennium.

Another project of the museum, ongoing during 2007, is a study concerning men and female Naval officers, their education, career, professional identity and personal life situation, related to the structural changes in the Swedish Defence organisation from 1980s until today, and to the Navy's new obligations, participating in international peace protecting missions. The collected material mainly consists of life story interviews and photos. Reports will be published.

The National Maritime Museums is the authority name for three Swedish maritime museums.

Sveriges Teatermuseum (The Theatre Museum of Sweden) is located in Gäddviken, Nacka, situated just outside Stockholm, in the building where Kungliga Operan and Kungliga Dramatiska Teatern have their scene shops. The theatre museum has some exhibition cases, a large museum hall with seminary possibilities, a reading room with a special room for researchers and storerooms with adequate climate. The museum also includes a library.

The library: With its appr. 72,000 volumes this is one of the largest specialist libraries in Europe for literature on theatre history, theory and drama, and contains books from 1499 to the present day. Holdings of books also cover art history and musicology, costume and cultural history, lyric drama, dance, mime, pantomime, shadow plays, puppet theatre, circus, scenography, theater machinery and architecture.

Collections: The theatre history collections include more than 40,000 objects from the 16th century to the present day in form of stage sets, stage models, costumes, properties, scenery and costume sketches, scenes and portraits (graphics, drawings, paintings and busts), puppet theatres, shadow play theatres, technical theatre items, and responsibility for the unique Drottningholms Slottsteater with its original machinery and large collection of stage sets from the 18th century. The collections mainly elucidate Swedish theatre history with large collections from theatre painters and artists like a.o. Emil Roberg, Fritz Ahlgrensson, Christian Jansson, Thorolf Jansson, Carl Grabow, Knut Ström, Isaac Grünwald, John Jon-And, Sven-Erik Skawonius, Sandro Malmquist and Nisse Skoog. The collections of the museum also include a large amount of foreign material, in particular graphics from the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries. At the moment bulkier items are housed separately. Sketches and engravings are mainly stored in our museum and can be seen on request.

The Separate Archives: The appr. 200 separated archives comprise original documents on Swedish theatre and theatre personalities, e.g. documents from theatres which have been closed down and from theatre groups, material connected with producers/theatre directors, stage designers and artists, including producers' annotated scripts, actors' part books, letters and diaries. Among the larger archives are documents from Agne Beijer, Per Axel Branner, Per Lindberg, Albert Ranft, Teater Aurora, Teater 9 and Teatercentrum.

The Press Cuttings Archives: The archives contain reviews, interviews, biographical details and theatre articles, mainly from the Swedish press, sorted after performance title, personal name, institution and subject. A watch was kept on some five to fifteen daily newspapers every day from 1948. Through later donations the whole 20th century and the end of the 19th century are covered. Among our larger press cutting collections you will find material from Nils Beyer, Ernst Eklund, Arvid Englands teaterförlag, Höstsol, Sven Lindqvist (about Cullbergbaletten), Esther Roeck-Hansen, Blekinge teater, Folkan and Sandrews' theatres.

The Collection of Play Manuscripts: The collections comprise appr. 49.000 play manuscripts from Swedish theatres and Radioteatern. The play manuscripts are unique material and cannot be borrowed, but we have more than 800 duplicates mostly from Kungliga Dramatiska Teatern and Stockholms stadsteater which can be borrowed. For more information about the play manuscripts contact the library.

The Archives of the Royal Theatres (KTA): KTA have been deposited on permanent loan at Sveriges Teatermuseum since 1945. These archives contain documents connected with the work of both royal theatres, i.e. Kungliga Operan 1773-1985/86 and Kungliga Dramatiska Teatern 1788-1907. There are some 450 metres of shelf space containing correspondence, contracts, technical journals, bills, lists of costumes, sketches of costumes, sceneries etc. There are also collections of plays from both royal theatres, containing more than 3,000 titles.

Open:
1st of February to	Monday-Sunday	10:00-16:00
30th of November

The U-359 was built in 1953, was in active service until 1989, and took part in the Cuban missile crisis. The U-359 is of the same type as the submarines which were detected in the southern Swedish archipelago.

Dive down into 40 years of world history with the „Ghost crew of U-359“ and experience life with the Russian submariners. The Russian submarine in Nakskov now has its own ghost crew, giving visitors a unique opportunity to experience what life was like on board of one of the Sovjet Union’s war machines.

Using modern computer technology and the physical framework of the vessel, visitors will gain an unforgettable insight into a fully active submarine. Visitors can both see and feel the Russian crew on the tour of the submarine. There will be commands from the Russian captain, authentic sounds, including a torpedo being fired and the crew celebrating when it hits its target, alarms, sonar detection, diesel engines at full thrust, etc.

www.uit.no/acta/index.html

Acta Borealia is a multi-disciplinary scientific journal for cultural studies. The journal presents results from basic research on northern societies, including reviews of new books about the north. The journal is also open to shorter comments on published papers.

The contributing authors are mainly from the Nordic countries, but also from other countries performing research on circumpolar societies. It publishes articles in such disciplines as history, archaeology, social anthropology, ethnography, geography and linguistics.

Acta Borealias is edited by a group of scholars at the University of Tromsø and by an editorial board drawn from several countries and from a wide range of disciplines. Acta Borealia is the only journal dedicated exclusively to a multidisciplinary, comparative focus on circumpolar societies.

The main attention is assigned to questions of ethnic relations, settlement pattern and development, economy and political, cultural and social phenomena from prehistoric times to recent past. Articles and book reviews are published in English.

Chief Editor: Anette Eklund Hansen

The periodical Arbejderhistorie is edited by a independent board of editors. The key issue is "history of workers", but this is interpreted as a very wide spectre of topics ranging from the history of the labour movement to the occupation 1940-45, the Cold War and "1968", as well as many other issues about political, social and cultural conflicts of the 19th and 20th century. The international profile of Arbejderhistorie means that the periodical not only focuses on Denmark, but contains a wide range of articles about the labour movement in other countries as well as other political, social and cultural topics, from the labour movement at St. Criox to espionage in the DDR. The aim is to provide national as well as international contextualization and also in this respect pay careful attention to historiographical, theoretical as well as methodological problems and ongoing discussions within the field. The scientific articles are pre-reviewed by independent professional historians and social scientists from our referee panel. Arbejderhistorie is published three times a year. The ordinary editions contain a minimum of 120 pages, while the annual thematic volume contains a minimum of 150 pages.

Framsyn is the magazine of the Swedish Defence Research Agency (FOI) describing the transformation of the Swedish Armed Forces as well as new trends in national security. Framsyn is published in close cooperation with the National Defence College (FHS). Each issue is devoted to one topic, for example, crisis management, network centric warfare and international policy.

Framsyn covers the whole field of national and international security and, also, puts science and research into context. The articles are elaborated by various experts in many fields of research as well as by the editor. Opinions expressed in the articles are the opinions of the respective author and not those of the authorities.

Framsyn is published six times a year. Most of its readers belong to the defence sector.

Chief Editor: Fil. dr Jonas Nordin

Historisk tidsskrift, founded in 1881, is the leading Swedish journal of scholarship in history and economic history. The journal is published four times a year and has a circulation of 1,700 copies. Historisk tidsskrift is peer reviewed and publishes basic historical research without topical constraints. Its emphasis, however, is on Swedish and Scandinavian matters. The journal includes major Articles, Debates, Reviews and Announcements. All doctoral theses within the disciplines of History and Economic History are generally reviewed by the faculty opponents, and the journal thus provides a good survey of Swedish historical research. Reviews contain bibliographical information in English and all major articles are accompanied by a Summary as well as Keywords in English. As from the 2002 issue Historisk tidsskrift is available in full-text format from the journal's home page. The service is free of charge with a moving wall of three years.

Chief Editor: Nils Petter Gleditsch

Journal of Peace Research is an interdisciplinary and international bimonthly journal of scholarly work in peace research. Edited at the International Peace Research Institute, Oslo (PRIO) by an international editorial committee, JPR strives for a global focus on conflict and peacemaking. The journal encourages a wide conception of peace, but focuses on the causes of violence and conflict resolution. Without sacrificing the requirements for theoretical rigor and methodological sophistication, articles directed towards ways and means of peace are favored.

Most articles in JPR present original research, but the journal also from time to time publishes an introductory op-ed article ('Counterpoint') and review essays on one or more books important to the field. JPR also publishes short 'Book Notes'. Altogether, over 100 books are reviewed in each volume.

Chief editor: Jens Ljunggren

Scandia contains articles on historical research with the primary focus on central issues in Nordic and Scandinavian history. Great emphasis is put on historiography and questions on theory and methodology. The journal was started in 1928 by Lauritz and Curt Weibull, professors of history in Lund, and Erik Arup, professor of history in Copenhagen. At that time Scandia was the mouthpiece of the critical school (den källkritiska skolan). In accordance with its tradition Scandia today aims at publishing innovative articles first of all in the field of Scandinavian history, but also with reference to a wider European context. Publishing languages are Swedish, Danish, Norwegian and English. Scandia furthers historical research on the Scandinavian countries and promotes interconnection between historians in these countries. Scandia also covers and critically discusses the usage of history in visual mediums such as museums, films and television.
